Those Immigrants:

IS THERE A CONSPIRACY TO FLOOD BRITAIN?

Nationalist comment

WHAT WE THINK

on the month's news

Question of the Hour

We have devoted much space in this issue to the question: is there a deliberate conspiracy to flood Britain with coloured immigrants?

There is much evidence that gives rise to this question. To take the current influx of Asians from Uganda as an example, it has been clearly established that there is no legal obligation on the part of the present Government to take the Asians in. It has also been established that India is prepared to take all of them who are of Indian descent. Although a number of countries have volunteered to take a quota, it is the Government decision to give every Asian first choice of coming to Britain, regardless of whether he or she holds an entry voucher or not. There is to be no direction of any Asians to other countries prepared to take them.

Some time ago the Government announced that it had set up a special department to assist immigrants to obtain repatriation should they want to. This was to mollify growing public demand for repatriation. Our information now is that immigrants approaching this department are met by officials who go to great lengths to persuade them to stay in Britain!

In a later article we have gone into some detail as to why we believe that these events may add up to a deliberate conspiracy to make Britain a multi-racial country. If readers think that this is too strong a word and that we are allowing ourselves to be led into the realm of fantasy or paranoia, they might pause for a little while and see if they can provide us with a better explanation for a policy which amounts to sheer national lunacy and is thus regarded by the greater part of the electorate.

How to Lose Trade War

Lately the term 'trade war' has been creeping into the dictionary of politicians and journalists, and not without reason.

It was as a move in the trade war that Prime Minister Heath made his visit to Japan last month, albeit as a pathetic gesture.

Mr. Heath's object seems to have been to tell the Japs that they were selling too many goods to Britain and not buying enough goods from Britain. Just what made him think the Japs needed telling this is a mystery; they have known it for years! Perhaps his object then was to persuade them to alter this policy, as the newspapers claim. But why should they? The Japs, unlike the British, shape their economic and trading policies to suit their own interests. It is in Japan's interests to sell vast quantities of goods on the markets of the world while protecting at home the industries that make those goods. Anyone who thinks that he is going to persuade the Japanese to change a policy which has admirably served their own interests is a damned fool, and that includes Mr. Heath.

At the same time as Japan gets all the benefits out of trade with Britain, America threatens, as another move in the trade war, to impose huge restrictions on foreign manufactured goods entering the United States. The British Government is terrified at this prospect for the effects that it will have on British industry, and is currently pleading with the Americans over the matter.

Such pleadings are likely to have about as much effect as Mr. Heath's mission to Tokyo. We will not persuade Americans, any more than Japanese, to shape their policies to suit our interests; they will be bound to suit their own, and who can blame them?

Action at home, rather than pleadings around the world, is the best prescription for the troubles of British trade and industry. The proper thing to do is protect our own home market for manufactures as the Japanese have protected theirs, and restrict our imports, as the Japs do, to the goods that we cannot produce in our own country, such as raw materials and certain varieties of food.

To obtain the latter commodities on the best terms, while obtaining also the most reliable export markets for our manufactured goods, we should then seek to rebuild the once close trading links that we had with the White Commonwealth, where there exists the nearest thing to economies complementary with that of the United Kingdom. This is the best way to survive in the trade war, indeed the only way of realism in the world today.

Why is Maria Free?

Maria McGuire comes over the Irish Sea and denounces her former chief, Provisional IRA leader Sean MacStiofain, for his brutal policies. Her story is taken up by the press and she is given sanctuary in a secret hide-out somewhere in England. Good little Maria, everyone cries, how decent and right she is to speak out against those atrocities!

It seems to have occurred to no-one that this woman was a leading member of Ireland's Republican murder gang, and that she played an important part in an arms smuggling exercise from the Continent aimed at providing that gang with big additions to its arsenal manufactured behind the Iron Curtain. As such, she is a wanted criminal and should have been arrested the moment she made her appearance here. The fact that she may be marginally less of a foul killer than Mr. Stevenson himself does not exempt her, surely, from the normal processes of the law.

We ask then what is going to happen to Miss McGuire? Is she going to be prosecuted for her part in the IRA or not? If not, does that mean that any other member of that organisation can cross the sea and in return for dissociating themselves from the more sadistic features of its murder campaign obtain immunity from the courts and the prisons?

The 'Porn' Debate

The final appearance of Lord Longford's Pornography Report was interesting perhaps less for what it contained than for the reactions it provoked, particularly from the leftist-liberal-permissive establishment.

LORD LONGFORD

The report itself came to what seems an eminently sensible conclusion: that the legal definition of obscenity be changed from that which tends to corrupt or deprave to that which causes offence to a majority of public opinion. If this new definition does not provide an easy and clear cut standard of proof, then neither did the old one. Indeed the latter made proof almost impossible. At least the newly proposed legislation places obscenity where it properly belongs in the lawbook — among those things determined by a consensus of human sentiment rather than by geometric reasoning.

Of the reactions, one can only say how striking are the elements of commercial vested interest and double moral standard. The vested interest side was most typically demonstrated by Mr. John Calder, who used the Liberal Party Annual Conference to lambast the Longford Report proposals as "extremely dangerous". As Mr. Calder happens to be the publisher who introduced Last Exit to Brooklyn into Britain, the public will need a lot of convincing that the 'danger' in mind is anything other than one threatening profits. Right throughout the 'porn' controversy one can see this alliance between liberal ideology and the smut industry, out of which comes an appealing rationale which happens to be excellent for trade figures!

The double standard can be seen in the way in which liberals (of all party allegiances) insist on applying a yardstick to questions of obscenity and immorality which they refuse to apply to other things. The result is that everything considered wrong has to have a 'rational' basis provided for its wrongness; its merely being repugnant to the instincts of the majority is not enough. Wrongness has to be 'proved', as if a mathematical equation. The same faulty criteria are applied by liberals towards homosexuality and abortion.

Contrast this, though, with the treatment given to certain subjects which in the realm of liberal thinking constitute special taboos, for instance the subject of Race. Here there is no interest in objective examination, in rational analysis, in logic, in 'proof'. The mere existence of Race is so abhorrent to liberal sentiments that that is reason enough for consigning it to Hell — consecrated in legal statute in the form of the Race Relations Act.

Why this inconsistency? Because Race strengthens and binds the national community while obscenity disintegrates it, and whatever serves the national community ill can rely on the beam of liberal-progressive approval.

Gay Tories

The spiritual decay of the Conservative Party is nowhere better demonstrated than in the antics of the Greater London Young Conservatives. The latest of these antics deserves attention.

GLYCs are planning a big campaign for 'homosexual reform' to be presented to the Tory annual conference in Blackpool this month. The main spokesman for the campaign will be one Ian Harvey, who was once a rising star in the party until he was convicted as a result of an indecent incident with a guardsman in St. James Park, London, in 1958.

The campaign aims at reducing the age of homosexual consent to 18 and to extend its application to the armed services and the merchant navy.

'Gay Power' has in recent years obtained such strong influence and infiltrated so many of its practitioners into high places that to criticise it is almost more than any newspaper or periodical will dare. Commentators on the current scene seem to cower in a state of constant fright at the intellectual tyranny that the 'new thinking' on homosexuality imposes — with the result that a kind of snobbery has arisen which consigns any opponent of 'gayness' to the ranks of peasant ignorance.

Spearhead has been perhaps an exception in that it has continued to take the peasant view.

We still believe, and thank God, that the Greater London Young Tories are not representative of the British nation.

Special Case

The fact that the recent murdering of Israeli athletes by Arab terrorists was an appalling crime barely needs stating. One cannot but wonder, however, whether, had the murdered athletes been, for instance, British or South African, quite the same repercussions would have followed — or, if they had, whether they would have met with quite the same world reaction.

Supposing that British athletes had been butchered by IRA men based in the Irish Republic. Would we have read in our papers a few days later that the RAF was dropping bombs on Dublin and Cork and that British Commandos were carrying out raids on villages in Donegal or Cavan? And if we had, can you imagine the howls of protest that would be ringing forth throughout the world's capitals and splitting the rafters of the assembly hall of the UN?

Supposing that South African athletes had been killed (assuming that they were there in the first place) and that the killers came from Zambia or Tanzania. What would have been the reaction of 'world opinion' if punitive military measures had been ordered by Mr. Vorster against those countries? We all know the answer, don't we!

Simpletons would therefore perhaps expect the same standard to be applied against Israel when she launched similar operations against neighbouring Arab states, but of course they would be wrong. World politics do not work like that. Israel seems to have a special status that places her outside the normal compass of international law, and she appeared to be aware of this the moment that the murder of the athletes was known. "Stop the Games!" she commanded, in the tones of one accustomed to instant obedience. It represented a small victory for sanity that the world did not on this occasion jump into line. It soon did so, however, by tamely accepting acts of armed aggression that it probably would not sanction in the case of any other power, large or small.

The same phenomenon showed itself in another aspect of the reaction of the US Government to the antics of Uganda's General Amin. Amin brutally ordered tens of thousands of Asians to get out of his country, herding them into concentration camps as they waited to leave. Not a flicker of action from Washington. Amin arrested a British businessman and flung him into prison without trial. Again not a flicker from Washington.

But then Amin did the utterly unpardonable. He made a verbal attack on the Jews. That was too much! Instantly all American financial aid was withdrawn from Uganda.

We hear a great deal about 'under-privileged nations'. It would seem that there is a case for declaring some nations 'over-privileged'.

AS POLITICIANS WELCOME THOUSANDS MORE ASIANS, WE ASK

IS THERE A CONSPIRACY TO FLOOD BRITAIN?

IS THERE A CONSPIRACY to flood Britain with coloured immigrants?

We make no apologies for putting this question in such strong terms. Every development of the last fifteen years demands that such a question be asked. One after another wave of immigrants has descended upon us, Asian, African and West Indian. Can it be accidental? Can it be explained by the normal excuses that are offered — persecution in their countries of origin, lack of economic opportunity in those countries, better opportunities here? Perhaps partially, but only partially. If immigrants do not like where they have been living, there is a whole big, wide world in which they may be resettled. Why do they have to keep coming to this crowded, highly populated country, where, we are told every day, people should practise birth control to keep the country's numbers down?

We are told that they come here because they are part of the British Commonwealth and Empire. But the countries from which they come have for a long time been spitting on the concept of Commonwealth and Empire, declaring themselves 'independent' and no longer subject to British control. Our politicians tell us that we must accept that these countries are no longer under our control. Very well, then why do the peoples in them continue to be our responsibility? We are told that the Asians have a "moral right" to settle in Britain. But is it not moral that Asians should settle in that part of the world in which they have their origins: in India, Ceylon, Pakistan and Bangladesh? We are informed that these Asian countries refuse to accept them. But we are informed falsely. The Indian government, for one, has declared its willingness to accept all Ugandan Asians of Indian origin.

Why has this vitally important fact been kept from the British public?

There is no adequate answer to these questions. This is why we ask if there are not reasons for the immigrants coming here of which we have not been told, reasons which those bringing them in decline to explain.

WHAT KARL MARX SAID

There is one reason for flooding Britain with immigrants, and that was supplied by Karl Marx, the founder of Communism. He said: "The British will never make their own revolution; foreigners will have to make it for them."

Marx said that a century ago, and it is interesting to ponder on what has happened since he said it. There has not been a full-blooded revolution in Britain as there was in Russia, but there has been a creeping subversion of our country, promoted by Communists — a kind of revolution by stealth. One after another institution in Britain has come under Communist or crypto-Communist influence. Although the Communist Party itself has remained small, undercover Communists and fellow-travellers have infiltrated into every kind of establishment, including the House of Commons and the political parties, as well as the press and B.B.C.

And everywhere where Communism has made its influence felt its promoters have included a disproportionately large number of people of foreign descent. People from Central and Eastern Europe, and more recently from the coloured world.

Now violent demonstrations by extreme left-wingers are getting more common, and these demonstrations feature an unusually high number of people who are not native Britons. The next time that you see such a demonstration, just count them. The proof is there.

Organisations have sprung up whose professed object is to help the coloured immigrants in Britain but which in reality serve simply as Communist fronts. One is the so-called 'Indian Workers' Association', which promotes trouble and unrest everywhere it can. There are also the various 'community relations' bodies which are being set up in all areas of high immigrant population. These bodies are heavily infiltrated by Communists, and the great majority of people in them belong to various shades of the left.

The result is that all over our country, particularly in key industrial regions, cells are being built up which could provide the material for political unrest in the future, for strikes, riots, even revolution itself.

As it is, masses of immigrants added to our population provide votes for the left. The great majority vote Labour by firm habit and provide the Labour Party with more and more assured seats. As Labour obtains such seats, it no longer depends so much on the moderate British voter and can veer increasingly, as it is doing, to the extreme left.

The extreme left, the promoters of revolution, need in every country situations of unrest which they can exploit so as to swell their ranks. Poverty, inequality and interracial strife provide these situations, as America has shown. In America the blacks, while by no means poor, are worse off than the whites because they do not have the same aptitudes for success in American society. They become resentful and instead of blaming themselves seize upon the opportunity to blame the social order. This is where left-wing political agitators step in: they inflame the blacks against the whites and violence occurs; a revolutionary situation develops, which Communists always exploit.

Now we are witnessing in Britain exactly the same situation in America. We have large racial minorities who in the most part cannot compete equally in our society, but who resent their inequality and can thus be politically exploited. Already this political exploitation is evident. As the political left increasingly loses credibility with the British working class, it compensates itself with the huge new reservoir of support that is provided by the immigrants. It desperately needs this support. That is why Labour politicians and people even further to the left can always be relied upon to champion immigration and viciously attack the British people who oppose it.

There is, in other words, an element in Britain which has a vested interest in more and more coloureds coming here.

The Tory Government might be expected to act otherwise, in its own party interests as well as those of the country. But Toryism today is weak — pathetically weak and decadent. Pressured from all sides, both within Britain and internationally, it has surrendered to demands to let more immigrants in. As the IRA has shown, if you are aggressive enough and nasty enough, you can do what you like with a Tory Government. It won't fight for Britain's interests.

CLASSIC REVOLUTIONARY MATERIAL

Through agitation on the left and capitulation on the right, an element has been imported into our country which provides the classic raw material out of which revolutions are made. In it there is a direct parallel with Russia. The Russian people did not make their own revolution; its leadership consisted almost entirely of foreigners. Russia was delivered up to Communism by an alien conspiracy fostered abroad and using people of non-Russian descent as its agents inside the victim country.

There is every sign that the same intention is at work in the moves to flood Britain out with immigrant peoples — every sign that behind all the soft soap about 'humanitarian obligations', etc., the conquest of our country by a modern brand of bolshevism is planned, with immigrants providing a large part of the conquering force.

If this seems far fetched where Britain is concerned, let it be understood that revolution can take many forms; it does not always involve the taking over of power by force. An armed uprising in our country may still strike many people as unlikely, and indeed may not happen. But we can still become the victims of a revolution by the steady take-over by left-wingers of our national institutions and by the gradual increase of the voting power at the disposal of left-wing parties. This is not mere speculation; as we have said, it has already happened to a great extent. It is happening all the time!

There is another aspect to the question that we need to consider carefully. Along with the huge importations of immigrants from the coloured world, there is a frantic clamour for them to be 'integrated' with our own native population — in other words to be interbred with the British people.

The world of press and publishing, and to an even greater extent the TV media, are in the forefront of this clamour. Both institutions are riddled with Communists and fellow-travellers.

What Communists have found the world over is that racially mixed peoples, peoples lacking a true national identity, are much more vulnerable to Communist influence. This has been proved particularly in Latin America.

On the other hand, relatively homogeneous peoples, such as those of the nations of Northern Europe and those parts of the United States inhabited almost entirely by people of Anglo-Saxon, Teutonic or Scandinavian descent, have proved more resistant to the virus. Although reds have become very powerful in Britain, their ideas have not won the hearts of many of the truly British people.

An increasing population of half-castes in this country will mean a growing element among the people susceptible to Communist influence and useful to the cause of subversion and revolution — raceless, nationless people with no roots and no loyalties, people who can be easily recruited for any anti-British cause.

The promotion of race mixture so as to serve this aim has been the object of a tremendous drive in Britain by the left-wing oriented mass media. We have been literally overwhelmed by films, TV plays, books and magazines portraying the happy consequences of racially mixed marriages and depicting all those who oppose them as callous, brutal, stupid and ignorant. Even the 'pop' song has been enlisted as a weapon in the campaign to vilify a healthy race consciousness in the White people and to promote a half-caste nation. Don't accept our word for these things; look out for them when you tune on your TV set or visit your local bookshop!

Naturally, the fury and the hatred of these propagandists has been turned heavily on South Africa, where the White people, very sensibly, operate a system of racial segregation in order to secure their own survival. Because there has developed in Britain a race problem that increasingly parallels the South African one, the propagandists of the left are eager to vilify South Africa and depict it as a hell on earth so that people will draw the inference that such a hell on earth occurs whenever resistance to the race-mixers is offered.

South Africa is in fact for the most part a happy and prosperous country where the coloured people, although segregated (some would say because segregated) are better off than anywhere else in Africa. Furthermore, South Africa is a natural friend, ally and partner of Britain with whom it is in our best interests to retain good relations — a thing which Communists and fellow travellers in this country have done their best to destroy.

Britain, however, does not have to adopt the system of South Africa because she does not have to have the same problem as South Africa. The non-White races of South Africa, like those of America, have been there for generations. We were up until recently a purely White country. We needlessly imported a race problem which we could have done without. You may agree with us after reading this that the problem was imported with a purpose in mind, and that that purpose is hostile to the interests of the British people and helpful only to the interests of Communism, subversion and revolution. It is not too late to get rid of the problem. The immigrants can still be humanely repatriated or resettled in other parts of the world. Don't believe them when they say this can't be done. It can be done if we the British people decide it and will it. If it is not done by our generation, the enemies of our country will have achieved what they have failed to achieve in a thousand years of war: the conquest and extinction of the British nation.

IF anyone has any doubts about the hollowness of 'African nationalism' then they ought to look at what is happening in the African state of Zaïre (formerly known as the Belgian Congo).

There has been a drive to 'Africanise' names, in a campaign designed to establish national 'authority'. President Joseph Désiré Mobutu has taken the name of Mobutu Sese Seko, which roughly translated means "the cock that leaves no hen intact" and decreed that all Zaïrians discard their Christian names in favour of 'authentic' African ones.

Leopoldville is called 'Kinshasa', Elizabethville is 'Lumumbashi' and the former Stanleyville is now 'Kisangani'; other towns have also been renamed.

Yet this 'nationalism' exists only in such harmless forms. Behind the facade, foreign capitalists have been invited in to plunder the country's natural resources. Happy that Mobutu's unchallenged dictatorial powers give Zaïre peace and relative stability, foreign investors are putting in money on a rising scale. A new copper mine is being opened by a Japanese mining group in Katanga and an international consortium has discovered what may be the richest bed of copper in the world.

In the capital, four car manufacturers are planning to open up assembly plants. Goodyear has just finished a $16.8 million tyre factory, an aluminium plant is in the planning stage and a steel mill is underway.

What is most significant is that nearly all investors come in on the understanding that they will be able to recover their full investment within three years, which means that in four years they will have taken out of the country more than they put into it.

THE TRUTH ABOUT "AID"

Zaïre will remain 'underdeveloped', or rather, 'undercapitalised', as interest debt on invested capital sucks wealth out of the country. "Foreign Aid" will be called for, and this will come from the Western World taxpayers, who will be told that they are 'helping Africans' by handing out money gifts. In fact, all such "aid" does is to bolster up the system of exploitation in the Third World by cushioning its worst effects. A small part of the 'aid' money will go to the native cronies of International Capitalism, but most of it will flow back to the owners and controllers of the International Capitalist financial and industrial complexes in the West. This is the reality underlying all the empty gestures of 'African nationalism'.

This is not the whole story, however.

The big banks and multi-national companies presently engaged in robbing the Third World, are all based in the West. Not only does the Western taxpayer fork out an enforced tribute to International Capitalism by way of 'foreign aid' he pays in other ways too...

MICHAEL LOBB

THE NEW COLONIALISM

The International Capitalist system is centred around the banks. Banks control the economies of Western countries, directly by holdings in industry, and indirectly by their control over currency, credit and trade.

Just as the Third World is made 'undercapitalised' so is the West made 'overcapitalised' by inflation and remitted interest on overseas investments. Overcapitalisation means 'expansion' and particularly, an expansion in job opportunities in relation to labour availability. This places labour in a strong bargaining position.

IMMIGRANT FLOOD

The answer of International Capitalism to this problem is twofold. Firstly, where capital is plentiful and labour scarce — fresh immigrant labour is imported. Witness the flood of Afro-Asians and West Indians to Britain, and Spanish, Yugoslav, Turkish and Italian workers to West Germany.

Secondly, where labour is plentiful and capital scarce — capital is invested, provided that the government of the recipient country is a 'stable' one. This explains Western investment in the Third World, and in the Soviet Communist bloc where no free trade unions are allowed. Goods produced in these countries by cheap labour, are then flooded back into Western countries to compete with home-produced articles. As the home-produced products are high priced, due to high labour costs, they cannot compete with the imported items. Home manufacturers find it difficult to sell their goods, cut back on production and cause unemployment and a fall in the general level of real wages. Western workers are thereby exploited by International Capitalism which uses foreign labour against them both at home and abroad.

Finally, International Capitalism is engaged in a drive to rationalise its multi-national holdings by building a 'One World' Government which it will control.

The European Common Market is a significant step in that direction.

Some people are surprised that the U.S.A. has pushed Britain into Europe, especially as U.S. Government officials talk of the "Common Market" as a threat to the trade of other countries.

ELABORATE PLOY

This is all an elaborate ploy on the part of the U.S.A. Once Britain is safely pushed into Europe, the U.S. will say to Latin America, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Japan, etc., "Let's get together to oppose this European 'Common Market' and its subsidiary 'associated' states in Africa." They will then build a rival trade bloc and "unify" their economic and political policies until only the two super-states exist in the West. The next step would be the coming together of these two into one single unit, with one economy and one Western World Government controlled by International Capitalism.

Here you have all the factors which dominate Britain today:

- Establishment support for 'Black Rule' in Africa and opposition to old style European colonialism, and White Rule in southern Africa.

- The impelling force behind Immigration and the propaganda war against the preservation of national and racial identity.

- The plan to push Britain into Europe against the wishes of the majority of British people, a plan which will effectively alienate the other British nations of the Commonwealth from the United Kingdom.

- The real reason for the Establishment's "generosity" with Foreign Aid.

- The social and industrial unrest, caused by attacks upon the living standards of British workers; by inflation leading to rising prices, by cheap labour goods and foreign trade difficulties causing unemployment, by the European "Common Market" forcing up the cost of living, and by Immigrant labour competing for jobs, housing, education and welfare.

This is why the National Front exists. It is the only party which fully understands these attacks upon British interests. The '14 Points' of National Front policy counter, in detail, all the individual aspects of International Capitalism's attack upon our British freedom and identity.

THE Labour Party's weekly newspaper "Labour Weekly" is printed by the Westminster Press group, owned by Tory Lord Cowdray, the head of the Pearson-Longman publishing empire.

ALL is not well with the Race Relations Industry in Newham. The chairman of the Newham International Community has resigned after only two months, following a series of angry exchanges with a number of members...

At a recent meeting, the chairman, Harban Butalia, was shouted down during a "long rowdy argument". Local press reports stated, "at times there were several people shouting at once. Mr. Butalia's plea to 'behave like adults and not children' went unheeded." One member said after the meeting: "Nobody was taking any notice of him. He was being shouted down. There was no idea of order and it seemed to me that about a third of those present were treating it all as a joke. It was a very rowdy affair."

No doubt we could look upon the antics of these supposed "promoters of tolerance" as a joke too, except that we are obliged to subsidise them through our taxes and rates.

AT the beginning of September, building strike pickets went on an "orgy of destruction" at building sites throughout Shrewsbury.

250 pickets descended on the town in coaches, cars and vans. They came from Liverpool, Chester, Oswestry, Wrexham and Colwyn Bay.

MICHAEL LOBB

CONTRARY VIEWPOINT

Only police attendance at building sites finally put a stop to their hooliganism.

I am at a loss to understand what these pickets set out to achieve, unless it was to drag the reputation of their trade union through the muck created by their criminal thuggery.

PROSPECTIVE home-buyers were recently warned by Mr. John Crouch, president of the House Builders Federation, that entry into the European "Common Market" is expected to add to costs and VAT is bound to increase overheads.

"THE Pope has publicly expressed his horror of the massacre at the Olympic Games which everyone must surely feel. But why no condemnation from him of the atrocities committed almost daily in Northern Ireland by so-called Roman Catholics." (Letter in the London Evening News)

AS far as the Establishment is concerned, you don't count and they pretend that they can't count. Here is an example of their deliberately confused and typically contradictory "mathematics". On September 7th, anti-Immigration trade unionists, and others, took part in a second protest march in London against the influx of Uganda Asians. Police estimates put the number of demonstrators at 1600 to 2000 people. The Evening Standard said 400. The BBC Radio claimed only 200 and the Evening News failed to notice the march at all!

THE Philippines faces a massive 19% increase in the rate of inflation by the end of the year, according to the First National City Bank in Manila. The cause is given as "the infusion of $45m in rehabilitation funds, the relaxation of credit by the central bank and foreign loans." The false claim so often heard here in Britain, that "wage rises cause inflation" is completely absent from the FNCB assessment.

TEN out of ten for prescience on the Tory 'Industrial Relations' Act - "... for some crackpot British Government to pass legislation making unofficial strikes illegal and compelling unions to 'go to arbitration' in the event of dispute with employers, would put the solution of industrial disputes exactly where the Communists and other extremists want it." (Frederick Abbott in The Wreckers, published by the Tory Monday Club in 1966.)

Student Group

The National Front Students' Association (NFSA) was launched on September 10th at a meeting in Croydon. The purpose of the NFSA will be to promote the National Front in Britain's universities, colleges and centres of education generally.

NFSA Chairman will be Mr. Denis Pirie, who is a member of the NF National Directorate and is studying economics at Sussex University.

The meeting discussed the practical problems of nationalist activity in a world of learning heavily dominated by leftist influence, both at student and teacher level. There was a strong feeling that many students were becoming tired of left-wing antics and the sterile ideologies that gave rise to them and sought a radical (as distinct from reactionary) alternative. However, it was also believed that in many - though by no means all - centres of learning pressures from authority, among other factors, posed great practical handicaps to NF students in the promulgation of their views. In very few universities did there exist sufficient nucleus for openly NF student groups. It was therefore resolved that NF students be advised to work within political groupings outside the left-wing spectrum in the majority of cases but to use every opportunity to promote the NF case, by both the spoken and written word.

It was resolved that a thrice yearly NF student newspaper be launched, appearing each term, for free distribution in universities; further that a pamphlet answering the main political questions of interest to students be produced by the NF Policy Committee. NF students would in addition be encouraged to produce, in cheap duplicated form, their own leaflets dealing with local university issues as they came into prominence.

The NFSA will not be an independent organisation but will remain an integral department of the National Front, keeping broadly within the lines of NF policy but allowed considerable autonomy in the operational field. Membership will be open to all paid up members of the National Front who wish to take a part in student activities and will not require any additional subscription. This means that it will not be limited to those currently enrolled at universities or colleges but can embrace ex-students and teachers of all ages.

A further meeting will be held later in the year at which more detailed plans of activity will be formed. In the meantime all those wishing to assist the work of the NFSA should contact Denis Pirie, c/o NF Headquarters, 50 Pawsons Road, Croydon CRO 2QF, Surrey.

SPEARHEAD FUND

We are pleased to announce that the target set by this fund for the year 1972 has now been reached. The remaining target figure published last month (£40) was incorrect, as due to a book-keeping error a donation of £20 which had been received was not then recorded. The correct target figure at that time of £20 has been met and passed over the last month, leaving a slight surplus, which we will keep in reserve to meet any unforeseen expenses. We take this opportunity of thanking our readers for the way in which they have responded to our appeals and made publication for the year possible. We will shortly announce our estimated financial needs for the year 1973.

ANOTHER traumatic experience has been endured by our nation, leaving it seriously weakened, injured and embittered.

The dockers, realising that the march of progress in mechanical handling is inevitable, felt that a determined stand must be taken in defence of their livelihood for their own sake, and that of their families. Displaced workers have felt the gross injustice of their position ever since the Luddites smashed up the machines which caused them this humiliation.

That increased productivity should result in an attack upon workers' standard of living is a paradox inherent in the system under which we have worked for generations, which has done endless harm to industrial relations. At this time, when vast sums of money can be spent on unnecessary expensive activities, men of character will not endure such gross injustice and have shown the Government, in no uncertain terms. Can they be blamed?

Dockers can be blamed for expecting continuous employment at high rates when not required in their trade. But they cannot be blamed if they expect other working opportunities at living wages. The system has been all too ready to stand men off for years while much work needed to be done. Thousands of new homes, hundreds of new hospitals, and prisons are most urgently required, with all their internal equipment. The nation has been content to see men idle when these things could have been done. The excuse has of course been that we could not afford them. This is plain nonsense. Any nation having the material resources, labour and management can create such assets. Intelligent working men know this and they will not accept that there is any difficulty in being provided with work, and at self-respecting wages. This is what the postmen's strike was about, but the Government beat them into the ground. The postmen could not stand on the nation's windpipe. Neither could the dustmen.

Trade Union leaders know the overall situation. They have repeatedly said that production could be enormously increased by using the million men now out of work. Full employment of national resources could revolutionise the national outlook, and give the nation a goal to work for, but it is impossible under the present debt system. This is rapidly strangling our country and destroying its currency.

The Bank of England has enjoyed unchallenged authority in the monetary field for nearly three hundred years, and has been primarily responsible for the conduct of money affairs. We now see the value of our money crashing down as never before, causing even the Daily Telegraph (City Editor, 14.8.72) to speak of a coming crisis for the Bank of England.

Money is a symbol of wealth and a title to goods and services, though in itself only paper, or accounts in a ledger. If money is to serve its true purpose it must originate with the State.

A.M. WADE

THE LESSON OF THE DOCK STRIKE

SOCIETY, MONEY, INFLATION AND PLUNDER.

In 1955 a Royal Commission of Enquiry on Banking, Credit, and Currency, was held in New Zealand. A contribution to the evidence, submitted by Colin G. Clark, formerly Economic Adviser to the Government of Queensland, is quoted as follows:

"The use of money together with the establishment of political and judicial order, is one of the characteristics which distinguish the civilised man from the barbarian. It is one of the first duties of the Government of any civilised country to provide its people with a reliable monetary system. Most of them, including New Zealand, are now failing to perform this duty."

"But any politician, public servant, economist, or banker who, with a full understanding of what he is doing, deliberately plans for, or condones, a continued rise in prices, is guilty of plundering the savings of the poor, an offence which, in the opinion of moral philosophers, should be ranked equal in gravity with the most serious criminal offences."

Our Government and preceding governments have failed absolutely to carry out this solemn responsibility. As we have shown, money created by the State costs the State only the paper and printing costs (about ½p per note) and money created as credit costs only the administration expenses. Yet the astounding truth is that all the vast sums of new money needed for the nation were borrowed, as of genuine money, from privately owned companies (banks) resulting in fabulous debt which is clogging the accounts of all industrial firms and sending nearly all bankrupt. The banks of course have never had it so good.

The full implications of the working of the monetary system were not widely understood until the early 1920's when the facts were made known by the New Economics school of thought. By 1925 the system was well understood by the old stalwarts leading the Labour Party, as proved by the excellent official record published in three large volumes entitled The Book of the Labour Party. But these illuminating influences, which could have ushered in a new climate of thought and action, and saved the world from the Second World War, were quickly suppressed lest, one may assume, they disturbed the traditional discipline of private finance. The only perceptible movements (in no way concessions to the new thought) were the nationalisation of the Bank of England in 1946, resulting in no change of policy; and the escalation of private banking coupled with higher interest charges, under the "Competition and Credit Control" proposals of the Bank of England, instituted last year (1971).

The flood of new credit and high charges appears to be one of the main causes of the disastrous slide in inflation causing what appears to be Government concern about Bank policy.

From 1931 to 1950 bank rate stood at 2 per cent which allowed industry and all activities to be financed at around 4 per cent, which provided a reasonable base for the economy and yet paid the banks a reasonable amount for their services. Money could be borrowed for house purchase at from 3½ per cent to 5 per cent. But after the war a new policy was adopted by the monetary authorities under which credit was severely restricted and interest rates were raised to unprecedented levels in peace time. This crippled the economy, creating high unemployment and consequently inflation because of the stagnation of the economy. The Government then made a frantic attempt to revive the economy by injecting huge sums of new bank credit into circulation, albeit at even higher rates of interest, thus accelerating the rate of inflation until everyone is alarmed and central bankers appear to have criticised the Bank of England policy. It is said that they prefer sound money. It is however unlikely that they have lost three quarters of their life savings on account of the policy dictated by the authorities in this country, as millions of our people have.

BRITISH BANKING POLICY AND MONETARY POLICY

British banks are rightly held in the highest respect for their efficiency, courtesy, integrity, and helpfulness to both the public and industry, and of course the commercial world. But their role was never intended to usurp that of the State in regard to the creation of money. This forms no part of banking proper though naturally it has been a source of easy money to them. Nevertheless it has caused their personal interest to be in opposition to that of the public and of the nation as a whole. For they have become moneylenders (though as a system not lending genuine money at all, but debt) and creditors; a section of the community holding a privileged position superior to that of the Executive itself, in matters of finance. Herein lies the fundamental cause of widespread bankruptcies, of nationalised industries being in the red, and of the ability of banks to buy up concerns and run them when industry has failed, for banks can create the means of payment out of nothing.

Lord Balogh rendered a great service to the country when he expressed in such clear terms the place of money in society and its true ethical and legal background: "Money has always been one of the most important attributes of sovereignty. You can issue money only as a sovereign power . . ." (Report No. 258. Select Committee on Nationalised Industries — Bank of England, May 1970, p. 192.)

All money in circulation and all financial credit is a part of the national debt on which interest is paid to the banking system. Hence the inability of the nation to increase its wealth without incurring further debt — a situation contrary to sense and justice and the direct cause of stagnation and inflation. Every nation has an inalienable right to issue its own money without debt to any section of that nation, otherwise that section is automatically in a superior position to the elected government.

Under these conditions the rich beneficiaries of the system become richer, and the poor become poorer. If the rich had to borrow all new money from the dockers; money they had created by book-keeping, and pay 10 per cent interest, the dockers would soon become rich and the rich would soon become poor. It is unlikely that it would take 278 years before the system was challenged!

CHANGES REQUIRED TO AVOID FURTHER CONFRONTATIONS

We need honest money which maintains its value. This can only be done by the right of issue being returned to Government hands and then placed under the management of a department of State outside political control. The banks, like every other business, would then be paid for their services but would cease control of the value of money in circulation and interest charges. They would share in the prosperity of the nation and benefit from low interest rates. This would lower prices and reduce taxation. It would increase growth rate and national credit would be used for financing State projects, free of debt and at very low interest.

Savings would not lose their value as now, which would more than compensate for reduced interest on savings. Actually no interest is received on investments in Building

Societies now because the loss by inflation is greater than the interest paid.

If these arguments for reform are sound (and no one has yet refuted them) it is a poor commentary on the Government and on the Establishment, that they should have failed to act on reputable principles of national finance, so that all sections could have been united in one common goal — in making the national cake larger, and providing a just distribution of work and consumption. Instead of that things have been allowed to drag on till tempers have been roused, and will be roused again, till the fundamental changes in our financial policy have been made which will make money a servant of the nation, and not its master.

Protests Over Asian Flood Played Down by Media

We have drawn attention before to the deliberate campaign by the news media to suppress or play down reports of activities organised in opposition to immigration. During the past month we have had overwhelming evidence of this practice. The National Front staged a powerful demonstration outside Downing Street in August, at which a letter of protest was handed in by its Acting Chairman to No. 10. Though TV cameras were active on the spot, nothing was seen on subsequent TV news broadcasts. One or two papers mentioned the event, but most ignored it.

Following this there were two marches and meetings held in London comprising mainly British workers belonging to no political organisation and with the National Front assisting. In some papers these were not reported at all. In others and in TV reports the numbers present were grossly falsified. The first march attracted about 700. No report acknowledged more than 400. The second march and meeting were variously reported as being attended by 200 to 400. In fact the true number present was between 1500 and two thousand.

At round about the same time large marches were held in Birmingham and Bradford in protest against the Asian influx, the latter being promoted by the British Campaign to Stop Immigration and assisted by Northern members of the National Front. This was ignored by national TV and press. Then early in September a march was organised by Leicester NF at which about 120-150 NF Midlands members were supported by great numbers of the ordinary public. The march culminated in a meeting attended by over 2,000. Not a word in the national press.

Similar press boycott was operated against an important NF demonstration in Manchester.

We are quite convinced now that a directive has gone out from the Home Office to all major newspaper editors and TV programme controllers requesting them "in the interests of racial harmony" to minimise the importance of all demonstrations against the Asiatic influx, and preferably not to report them at all. If the Home Office cares to categorically deny that any such directive has been issued, either by itself or any other Government department, we shall be glad to retract this statement.

We have also heard from a reader that on a recent sound radio broadcast it was admitted that the Government was considering the suppression of literature opposing the invasion.

AIRPORT FINES APPEAL

As some readers will know, National Front members who demonstrated against the Ugandan Asian influx at London Airport on 12th September received vicious fines totalling more than £450. We appeal to all readers to help pay these fines by sending their contributions into NF Head Office, 50 Pawsons Road, Croydon CRO 2QF, Surrey.

OLYMPIANS COMING

THE LIBERAL DREAM TAKES

THERE SHOULD BE NO SURPRISE at the fact that the 1972 Olympic Games has seen the unfolding of yet another chapter of the 'politics and sport' saga. On the contrary, the only surprise is that there are still people who react with pain and shock to the mixing of these two elements.

Of all the comments accompanying the familiar wrangles taking place at Munich this year, the most realistic came from Ronald Spark, writing in the Daily Express, who said:

"The African countries did not bring politics into the Games; it has always been there."

Spark was of course absolutely right — more right than all the dreamers and idealists who yearn for an Olympiad free from nationalistic rivalries and tribal tensions; more right than those who invoke the mythical image of an Olympics illuminated by the spirit of Baron de Coubertin and his much enshrined words: "The important thing is not winning but taking part"; more right than those who ask at the end of every Games: "If this is what the Olympics have come to, ought they to continue?"

Indeed, what we see in these dreams and ideals, these myths and fantasies surrounding the Olympics, is merely a reflection of similar fantasies concerning human affairs generally.

They are the reactions of the classical liberal to the world of sport, and mirror classical liberal attitudes to the world generally. Calling forth a fairytale vision of mankind united peacefully in friendship and love, they are remote from the real sporting arena as they are remote from the wider arena of international affairs.

Because the good Baron is recognised as the founding father of the Games, it does not mean that his conception of them is any nearer reality. He was a wealthy aristocrat, living in a society of grace and ease. Like many others born into a similar milieu, he cherished dreams about the potential of mankind that belong, not to this earth, but to the community of angels floating, cream complexioned, among the ethereal clouds. The Baron's breed does not die out; it perpetuates itself at every level of Olympic officialdom today, as throughout the last eighty years. Men coming largely from an internationally oriented leisured class converge together and generate their own sweet mirage of what the Olympics are, a mirage reflecting the temperate etiquette of their own society, with its cosmopolitan outlook

PRODUCTS OF RED FITNESS DRIVE

Russian sprinter Valeriy Borzov (above) and East German Monika Zehrt (above right), both Munich gold medallists, are typical representatives of the state-sponsored athletics system.

The word 'compete' is deliberately used, for there is no evidence that the British participants themselves entered any the less eager and determined to mount the medal rostrum than any of their rivals. The legend of the British 'good loser' dies hard. Our athletes are probably no better, and no worse, losers than those of other nations.

The essential difference lies in the national system that has produced them. This system, unlike those of America, Russia and East and West Germany is shaped by classical liberal doctrine in which the ideal is allowed to crowd out the reality to the point of virtual exclusion.

This doctrine demands that at the Olympics the brotherhood of man should be paramount and ends up by believing that it is; it rues the fact that national rivalry dominates and ends up by believing that it doesn't. The wish is always father to the thought!

The result is that there is in Britain a complete absence of any state policy which aims at high fitness and high athletic prowess within the nation such as would make Olympic success an odds on certainty. If there is a desire for these things on the part of some people at high official level, it certainly is not a desire over which our national leadership is united. The result is the modern British disease of doing things by halves. Government, as a feeble concession and amateur's ethics — a society in which tribalism, partisanship and the fanatical will-to-win are vulgar and foreign.

It is not in these favoured circles, however, that the reality of the Olympics is to be found. The reality is to be found in the homes of ordinary hard working folk, where TV sets are tuned into events with the dominant question in all minds being: "Will our man win?"

TOIL AND SACRIFICE

The reality is to be found above all in the respective camps of the competitors themselves and their trainers and coaches. There the atmosphere is charged with the consciousness of years of dedicated toil and sacrifice, all directed to the one great day of supreme challenge on which, not the ideal of friendly camaraderie between nations, but the glory of victory is the overriding thought.

It was against this background in which the ideal is at such odds with the reality that the 7th British Olympics team since the war went to Munich to compete.

G DOWN TO EARTH

to those who ask for more to be done for sport, gives £4 million a year for the provision of better facilities for athletes. In a nation of 56 million, this just goes nowhere. Many other nations, including some much smaller than ourselves, are giving ten and twenty times that figure for the same purpose.

People ask themselves, after looking at the medal tables, how it is that East Germany, with a population less than a third our own, can produce so many more medal winners. However, to compare total populations as a measure of potential sporting strength is totally misleading; what have to be compared are the populations of participating trained athletes, and in a wider sense the populations of physically healthy young people out of which they are drawn. Nations that do not allow their youth to slouch around street corners and coffee bars wasting away their time, but get them into the gymnasium and on the running track, turning them into fit and vigorous citizens, cannot be compared with nations that in deference to the tin idols of liberalism and laissez-faire feel no duty to lead their young people and just allow them to drift into idleness, booze and pot-smoking whereby the body becomes weedy or flabby, the mind lethargic and the will atrophied. One will have a large pool of vigour and talent out of which to find champions; the other will just have to hope for the occasional champion arising by his own initiative alone from out of an environment of decadence.

MEASURE OF NATION'S WORTH

It is often said that we must not lose our perspective in taking Olympic medals as the measure of a nation's worth, and, considering that the difference between a medal and no medal is often no more than a tenth of a second, this is of course quite correct. However, Britain's mediocre medal tally at the Olympics would be more bearable were it not an accurate reflection of the health and fitness of our population generally. While accidents and luck can determine a specific event, Olympic performance taken over twenty years and encompassing five Olympiads cannot help but even out into a fair reflection of national physical standards. Looking to one's right and one's left about the streets of any British town or city, one cannot help but feel that this is so in our case. How often today does one see a young man or young woman whom one can call a really good physical specimen? And yet in a really healthy community it should be possible to say this of the great majority.

However much we detest Communism – and this journal is not likely to qualify for the title of pro-Communist – we have to acknowledge that the Communist world does not suffer, as we seem to do, from a state of utter indifference to the physical condition of its young people. On the contrary, it goes to great pains to train them up to high standards of fitness and strength. Such a policy may in the future take its toll on us in events more serious than the Olympics.

Some may claim in answer to this that it is the shamateurism of the Communist countries that is the decisive factor in Olympic success. It certainly is a factor, but it is only a part of the general difference in attitudes. We are unable to stop this shamateurism, any more than we are able to alter the massively organised athletic regime of the countries where it is practised. Why then do we persist in humiliating ourselves by sending our own athletes to compete against it under conditions of such handicap?

For the 7th time since the war Britain comes back from the Olympics with an also-ran record, and for the 7th time since the war (and before the war it was the same) there is the usual post-mortem, with its moans and its groans and its resolutions. And at the end of it all we can safely predict that, as usual, nothing will be done.

Nothing will be done because, however much national sentiment may demand it, such sentiment will not penetrate where it matters – the corridors of power. There liberal ideals will prevail, as ever before – liberal concepts of sport as well as liberal concepts of international relations and of the rights and duties of the individual in society.

And so we will probably go to Montreal in 1976 with the same old pattern repeating itself once again. Thus will it be until at the head of national affairs the dreamy countenance of liberalism and brotherhood disappears and is replaced by the firm jaw of national resolution and will-to-win.

THOUGHT FOR THE MONTH

The fundamental fallacy of the 'liberal' creed is that individuals are, by some mysterious chemistry, endowed with 'rights' – whereas in fact ordered society is fundamentally built on duties. It is only through the acceptance and performance of those duties that rights arise.

Freedom in essence depends on the restriction of freedom. A man's very right to his home and family exists only because his neighbour has a duty not to snatch them from him; he is free to live a civilised life because the law deprives others of the freedom to interfere with it. Civilisation is possible only where this relationship is clearly understood, and freedom is possible only where the duties that create rights are stipulated in a stable constitution, that is to say, a living and implicitly accepted tradition.

In every country of the free world, however, the 'liberals', exalted by their ignorance of social structure, and the Communists, recognising an ideal instrument of destruction, agitate for 'democracy', by which they mean the utmost and indiscriminate extension to everyone of freedom without duties, and of the right to influence the destiny of the nation, whether for good or evil, in whatever way his own whims or interests may suggest.

What the 'liberals' ignore and the Communists conceal is the elementary fact that, since only a few in any generation can be above the average and above existing conditions, it is only the few whose free influence can elevate and ameliorate. The majority, particularly the many below parity in sanity, health and vigour, can, by exercising their unrestrained influence on existing conditions, only debase them.

THE ANATOMY OF LIBERALISM

RACE AND INTEGRATION: SCIENTISTS SPEAK OUT

"... IF those Negroes with the fewest Caucasian genes are, in fact, the most prolific and also the least intelligent, then genetic enslavement will be the destiny of the next generation. The consequences may be extremes of racism for both Blacks and Whites."

"... that for low IQ Negro populations, each 1 per cent of Caucasian ancestry raises the average IQ by one point . . . the major deficit in Negro intellectual performance must be primarily of hereditary origin."

These are the words of Dr. William Shockley, inventor of the transistor, Nobel laureate, geneticist and currently professor of Electrical Engineering at Stanford University, California, to the American Psychological Association in September 1971.

Of late, Dr. Shockley has been in the spearhead of the new wave of "Race Scientists" attempting to break through the hypocritical barrier of "academic freedom" to demand an objective, national study of race and intelligence in the USA. The National Academy of Sciences has several times voted against sponsoring such a study.

Why? the reader will ask. Haven't we all been told how oppressed and deprived the Negroes are and how these "environmental factors" have caused the Negro's almost zero contribution to culture? How is it that the Establishment mouthpieces tell us that "everyone is created equal", whatever that may mean, when in our hearts we know that the truth is otherwise?

The fact is that the assumption of flat human equality in intellectual capability is basic to all liberal and communistic political philosophies. If this assumption is indeed false, then all the pious ideas of peace, redistribution of wealth, and equality of the liberals are constituted on a foundation of fiction.

JENSEN BROADSIDE

One of the first broadsides against this foundation was delivered by Dr. Arthur Jensen in February 1969 in the prestigious Harvard Educational Review in which was published some of his research into race, heredity and intelligence. Dr. Jensen made two important points which have significant bearing on the attempts of the US Government to integrate forcibly the Black and White races at the school child level:

(1) Compensatory school programmes (such as Head Start) are a failure; they have not raised IQ or scholastic achievement, and

(2) these programmes were built on two false assumptions: that children are equally endowed with intelligence at birth; and that differences in their scholastic achievement can be equalised by improving the environments of children who do poorly.

Dr. Jensen also verified that the IQ difference of 15 to 20 points between the average Negro and the average White is almost exclusively hereditary in nature. This was easily done by comparing Negroes and Whites from the same educational and socio-economic backgrounds to eliminate environmental biases. Even so, many Whites from the poorest backgrounds scored significantly higher than the better-off Blacks. The most deprived minority in the USA, the Red Indians, scored seven IQ points higher than the Negroes.

It has been argued that poor nutrition, due to poverty, has adversely affected the Negro intelligence over the years, the false implication being that if Negroes had adequate nutrition their IQ's would be the same as those of White people. But this is not an argument that withstands logical analysis. It is frequently forgotten that most poor people in the US are White people (even though in many parts of the USA most of the welfare hand-outs go to Negroes) and poor diet affects them in the same way. The difference in IQ that is measured has a racial basis.

"GUILT COMPLEX"

Dr. Jensen further states that "... our disturbed conscience (guilt complex) over the 'historical mistreatment' of Blacks in this country may hinder our ability to ask the right questions and to see answers through research."

Jensen's point about our ability to ask the right questions is well taken. Just recently, Dr. Shockley was denied permission by Dean L. Moses of Stanford University's Graduate Studies to teach a course in racial genetics because his "objectivity" and I quote, "was in doubt" (!) — despite the fact that he is one of the most qualified men in the world.

One wonders who calls the tune for the University that employed Angela Davis, the Negro Communist, and does employ Herbert Marcuse, another well known Red revolutionary and darling of the liberal-left. Apparently their qualifications and "objectivity" are beyond reproach. Equally amazing are the courses in "Black Studies" and "Marxist Philosophy" and other such rot which are given credit status!

The reason?

Quite simply, Dr. Shockley stands for the truth about race and intelligence, refusing to be blackmailed by the Marxist Mafia that controls so many of our Western Universities today. In discussing this "... our national Negro illness", Shockley says, "I sincerely and thoughtfully believe that my current attempts to demonstrate that American Negro shortcomings are preponderantly hereditary in nature is the action most likely to reduce Negro agony in the future."

Harvard professor of psychology, Dr. Richard Herrnstein, has added his voice to the barrage. In the September, 1971 Atlantic magazine he concludes that intelligence is largely hereditary, that the US ruling class is of higher IQ than the lower classes and that this new caste system based on intelligence will only become more obvious the more our technological society advances.

Herrnstein was frank to the point of curtness speaking of ghetto riots: "They're not rebelling because they don't have jobs they could have and are being denied. They are crazy rebels who are too dumb for these jobs, and that's why they don't have them. So they're rebelling against their genes." Needless to say, this IQ division corresponds almost exactly with the racial division between White and Black.

GENETICS DESTROYS MARXISM

He also made some astute political observations concerning the ulterior motives of the race-mixers: "Many liberal folks are made rather nervous by the idea of inherited differences in intelligence. The topic is inherently explosive, and radicals recognised that and exploited it . . . My article is inimical to certain Marxian tenets. Some of the brighter radicals realise how dangerous my

AUTHOR NOTE

DAVID HIDSON has been a member of the National Front for three years. After obtaining a Bachelor of Science (Honours) degree from the Imperial College of Science and Technology, London, two years ago, he went on a scholarship to Carleton University, Ottawa, Canada, where he is preparing his Doctorate of Philosophy thesis as a member of the Science Faculty.

David was involved in politics before he left St. Albans County Grammar School. At this time he was attracted by Marxism. By the time he was 17 he was a member of the National Executive Committee of Britain's oldest established Marxist party, the Socialist Party of Great Britain, and was Press Officer for the S.P.G.B. Mid-Herts Branch.

He was obliged to change his political ideas radically when he came to see, as a result of independent study, that the Marxian 'line' on race, heredity and genetics was not just mistaken but a cynical concoction of deliberate deceptions. Alive to the possibility that as Marxists lie about the fundamental issue of race, they are quite as likely to lie about other important subjects, he began investigating alternative political outlooks.

Rejecting the Conservative, Labour and Liberal parties as organs of the same rotten Establishment, he turned his attention to the National Front. After a certain amount of hesitancy caused by suggestions in the National Press that the NF was "neo-Fascist", David studied the Nationalist case in depth. He joined the NF when he became convinced that Nationalism is the only political ideology which can sustain a truly progressive civilisation and a culture which strives for excellence.

PROOF-IF PROOF WERE NEEDED- THAT...

HEATH HAS DECEIVED THE PEOPLE

SHORTLY before the last General Election Mr. Enoch Powell advised all of his supporters, who are by no means confined to the Conservative Party camp, to vote Conservative. I do not doubt that Mr. Powell is sincere in his anti-Coloured Immigration views, but the fact remains that he gave wrong advice to the British people.

Few people doubt that it was in fact Mr. Powell who won the last election for the Conservative Party. Several surveys of voting patterns have shown that a significant number of traditional Labour voters switched to the Tories because they "wanted to vote for Enoch" - that is, for Mr. Powell's anti-Immigration policies. Those naive souls have been cruelly conned, as the Conservative Government's decision to allow the 80,000 Ugandan Asians to pour into Britain established.

Whether or not Mr. Powell himself was a part of this confidence trick is a matter for debate, though my personal view is that he too may have been taken advantage of and then later betrayed by the Heath Gang. What is certain is that while Heath detests Powell and Powell's ideas, the chubby sailor who only smiles at Press cameras took full advantage of the Powellite 'movement' during his General Election campaign.

In particular, he issued from his private office a special stereo-type "personal" letter to all the many thousands of voters who wrote to him asking what a Conservative Government's Immigration policy would be.

HEATH'S BROKEN PROMISES

In his reply he stated the following:

"The next Conservative Government will . . .

1—Strictly limit the number of Immigrants coming into this country.

2—Immigrants who are admitted will not be granted an immediate unconditional right to settle here permanently.

3—Immigrants will only be allowed where they are needed for a specific job in a specific place for a specific time.

4—Only wives and young children will have the right to join Immigrants who have already settled here.

5—Further Immigrants will be prevented from settling in any area where the pressure on social services is thought to be too great."

EVERY SINGLE ONE OF THESE FIRM PROMISES HAS BEEN BROKEN.

The amount of Immigration into Britain has not been "strictly limited". Even apart from the influx of the 80,000 Ugandan Asians, the Tories have allowed in 40,000 'legal' Immigrants each year since they came into office. Furthermore, inadequate steps have been taken to prevent massive illegal Immigration, and such Immigrants who are discovered are rarely repatriated, except oc-asionally for those few who are actually caught on the beaches.

Not the slightest step has been taken by the Tories to establish that Immigrants do not necessarily have a right to settle here permanently. On the contrary, vast sums of money have been spent on projects to ensure that Immigrants integrate fully into British society. No Ministry of Repatriation has been established. Immigrants who seek repatriation are referred to a private 'charity' whose social workers do their best to persuade the Immigrants to stay. Enormous amounts of public money have been spent on printing literature in dozens of different languages informing the Immigrants what their "rights" are, but little or no publicity has been given to repatriation facilities.

Not the slightest attempt has been made by the Tory Government to prevent Immigrants from going into areas where unemployment is already high. So far from keeping out Immigrants who do not have a secured job to go to, all the Government has done is direct the Immigrants to the nearest Social Security office when they arrive in the country.

SPECIAL RIGHTS FOR BLACKS

The Government has likewise not restricted the immigration of other than wives and young children of Immigrant male heads of families already here. The chronic sick, the halt, the lame, first cousins twice removed, aunts, uncles, best friends - they've all been allowed to pour in, regardless of the fact that they will be a heavy burden on the taxpayer. On top of this, the Government has allowed the introduction of a Bill in the House of Lords which will give full legal recognition and Social Security benefits to second, third and fourth (simultaneous) wives of Coloured Immigrants and their children. Bigamy laws still apply against native born white people.

Finally, the Government has not taken any special powers to prevent "further Immigrants from settling in any area where the pressure on social services is thought to be too great." This very request was made by Councillors of cities like Birmingham, Leicester, Bradford, and of boroughs like Ealing and Brent - whose social services are on the verge of collapse thanks to the Immigrant influx - when the grim news of the Ugandan Asian invasion was announced. But the Government specifically rejected the reasonable proposition as "unconstitutional and dictatorial" . . . the very policy which Heath himself had promised to implement before he assumed office!

Despite the fact that every single one of Heath's promises has been broken, he and creatures like Robert Carr and Alec Douglas-Home ("the man of integrity") have the gall to come on to our television screens with expressions of stern nobility and resolute sincerity on their faces and lecture the British people on their "legal and moral obligations"! These men must be utterly convinced that the British people are the stupidest shower of spineless idiots on the face of the earth! (If we are honest with ourselves, who can blame the politicians for thinking this way?)

Because the mass of the British people have confined their protests against the betrayals both of Conservative and Labour Governments to the pub and the works canteen, the politicians clearly think that the people will put up with anything. It is because of past gross cowardice on the part of the British people that the Government is able to keep "promises" to the likes of the Ugandan Asians, and break them with the electorate.

MORE HEATH TRICKERY

Heath's complete contempt for the British people and national institutions was exemplified by the timing of the announcement of the Asian invasion. It is common knowledge in Whitehall and Fleet Street that Heath knew that the Asians were going to get kicked out of Uganda months before the public announcement was made.

But during the period of the last Parliament the Tories were up to their eyes in trouble with the Common Market legislation, with troubles arising from the Industrial Relations Act, and with the Northern Ireland situation.

If the Ugandan Asian crisis had come on top of all these other problems then there is little doubt that Heath's slender Parliamentary majorities would have disappeared altogether, and he would have been forced to call an election - which event could have effectively prevented Britain from joining the Common Market.

It is accepted that Heath struck a deal with General Amin to the effect that if Amin would delay his announcement until the last week of the last Parliament, then Britain would accept all the Asians and continue to give Uganda foreign aid. With Parliament closed for the long Summer recess, and millions of Britons away for their holidays, Heath hoped that there would be no forum for any expression of Parliamentary or public anger until after the majority of Asians had arrived - by which time he hoped that the apathetic and cowardly British public would have accepted the invasion as an accomplished fact.

It seems, however, that Heath misjudged the spirit of the British people - and misjudged the ability of the National Front to organise effective demonstrations against the Asian invasion which had the effect of sparking off numerous demonstrations not just on the part of other patriotic groups, but also on the part of independent groups of workers and housewives.

There can be no doubt that the first Smithfield Workers march in London - which was promoted and organised jointly by Smithfield men and the National Front - plus the distribution by the National Front of more than half a million anti-Asian invasion leaflets during the first three weeks of September, had the effect of getting a nation-wide anti-Immigration movement on the road.

PUBLIC OUTCRY

The public outcry thus aroused caused Robert Carr to dash back to London still dripping wet from the beaches of Corfu, and necessitated Alec Douglas-Home - dripping wet at any time - to make a panicky Ministerial broadcast to the nation. Neither event had the slightest effect on public opinion. Indeed, press commentators - even of the most revoltingly pro-Immigrant variety - have had to admit that the vast majority of the British people are utterly opposed to the Asians being allowed to come to Britain.

It may be that the intensity of public feeling over this issue will die soon - but what is certain is that the British public will never again be quite so apathetic over the issue of Immigration. Thousands of people who have never before become involved in mass expressions of public feeling have become involved in the anti-Immigration campaign, have come into contact with patriotic groups like the National Front and the British Campaign to Stop Immigration, have avidly read literature issued by those organisations.

Most important of all, the British people have rather surprised themselves with the amount of fuss and commotion they are able to make when they really want to. They now have a sense of their own potential to exert influence in a way that they did not have before. The brainwashing campaign of the Race Relations Industry has been put back by at least ten years.

It is vital that pressure be put on the few patriots left in the House of Commons to detach themselves from the camp of the Establishment. In particular, Enoch Powell must be persuaded never again to ask the British people to give blanket support to the Conservative Party.

The people must be advised: "Only vote for a candidate - no matter what his party - if he is genuinely in favour of halting all Coloured Immigration and supports a policy of repatriation; otherwise DON'T VOTE AT ALL."

Why Ulster Loyalists Won't Trust The Tories

- By Enoch Powell

Mr. William Whitelaw, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, is much given to expressing astonishment and distress, in equal proportions, at the discovery that his assurances to the people of this province are not believed. He repeats frequently and emphatically the time hallowed formulae about the people of Northern Ireland not being handed over without their consent. What more, he asks, can they want? Why do they not trust me?

I intend this evening to try to help Mr. Whitelaw to understand, not so much because it is one's duty at all times to offer counsel and enlightenment to a colleague but because it is the incomprehension of basic reality which the British Government manifests in the person of the Secretary of State that is claiming a rising toll of death and suffering and is hurrying this province and its people towards the bourne from which there would be no return.

The reason why Mr. Whitelaw and the Government are disbelieved is not that people think they are deliberately telling untruths and intending to deceive. The reason is simply this: their actions and their behaviour contradict their words. It is not possible both to assure the people of Northern Ireland that their place in the United Kingdom will be maintained, and at the same time to have parleyed with the I.R.A., face to face in the capital of the kingdom: or at the same time to bask in the adulation of an Opposition whose Leader has been publicly complimented by the Government for proposals designed to produce a united Ireland in the measurable future; or at the same time to proclaim the intention of finding a "political solution" to which no avenue will be treated as barred and to which the agreement is sought of those who are fundamentally committed against Ulster being part of the United Kingdom; or at the same time to seek what, before Stormont was suspended, used to be called "tripartite" understanding on Northern Ireland with the Republic, whose very constitution asserts that Northern Ireland belongs to it already.

When those within and without, friend and enemy alike, observe the actions and reactions of Her Majesty's Government, they think to themselves: "The British Government want out. They do not mean what they say. Otherwise, why would they talk about reconciliation with those who are irreconcilable? and why would they so scrupulously refrain from any act or attitude which would commit them to maintain the status quo against all comers?"

SPEECH "BORDERING ON INCITEMENT TO SUBVERSION"

I will tell you of a little experience of my own. Last month I made a speech in County Down. It was a speech in which I warned the loyal majority, in clear and solemn terms, against taking the law into their own hands; and it was delivered before those actions of the UDA which we all remember. By chance, it came to my attention that, behind my back, in a letter to a constituent, one of Her Majesty's defence ministers,

THE OFFICIAL TEXT OF
MR. POWELL'S SPEECH TO
THE CO. ARMAGH UNIONIST ASSOCIATION AT
LOUGHGALL ON FRIDAY
28th JULY 1972.

a Mr. Kirk, had described the speech as "bordering on incitement to subversion." I concluded that he could not have seen what I actually said, and I sent him the text. To my astonishment he not only persisted in his accusation, but cited verbatim in support of it the following sentence: "All the more doggedly, therefore," this is what I said to the Unionists assembled at Banbridge, "must you fortify and entrench yourselves behind the plain uncomplicated things for which you stand." And what were these "plain, uncomplicated things"? I will read on: "The answer is: loyalty to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland; and union, meaning the union of all its parts, including this one."

So things have come to this pass, that when a Member of Parliament exhorts his fellow citizens in Northern Ireland to remain peaceably loyal to the union of the kingdom, his words appear to one of Her Majesty's ministers for defence - for defence (mind you!), not social services or technological research - to be "bordering on incitement to subversion". When such is the mentality which prevails about Northern Ireland in the ranks of the Government itself, need Mr. Whitelaw be so surprised if his assurances ring less than credible? After all, what do people think that the famous "initiative" itself was all about, into which the Government talked themselves backwards in March, and in which we are assured, in the intervals between the detonation of bombs and the rattle of musketry, that they still persist? Was the purpose of the initiative to give the majority of this people a reassurance which they had hitherto lacked? to be able to grapple this province to the rest of the kingdom with tighter hoops of steel? to demonstrate more firmly still to whomsoever it might concern anywhere in the world that no threats or violence or assaults would prevail to prize Britain loose from her purpose? Did it look like that then? Does it look like that now?

No, Mr. Whitelaw need not go far to find the answer to his puzzlement.

CONTRADICTIONS OF BRITISH GOVERNMENT NOT ELIMINATED

If Northern Ireland is to be saved from civil war and incalculable disaster, the policy of the Government must be radically altered. When I say 'radically', I mean 'radically'. A week ago I asked Mr. Whitelaw in the House of Commons how many more lives would be fruitlessly sacrificed before he came to realise that the political policy on which he is engaged will have to be altered. The grim answer - still, alas, incomplete - was given by the carnage of the three following days. Certain military steps were thereupon taken which, if they were possible and necessary then, had been possible and necessary two weeks, two months, before and ought to have been taken two weeks, two months before. But let no one make the mistake of concluding that thereby the fatal political contradiction of the British government's policy has been eliminated. Within 24 hours Mr. Whitelaw was heard inviting all and sundry to write to him with their ideas about how Northern Ireland should be governed - like a competition in Tit-Bits or Home Chat - and promising himself an interesting postbag. Within 48 hours his Minister of State, Mr. Paul Channon, was inviting Miss Devlin to "come forward with some constructive way in which we can achieve a political solution".

"POLICY MUST BE RADICALLY ALTERED"

I repeat: the policy must be radically altered; it must be so altered as to place beyond doubt what is disbelieved in words: that the integrity of this province as part of the kingdom will be upheld, come what may. This is not a doctrine of bloodshed and brute force: it is the reverse. The soil in which violence grows and flourishes is doubt of Britain's purpose. Until that doubt is removed, the results of military action - whether, in the hideous jargon, "low-profile" or "high-profile" - are written in water.

I have indicated over and over again what the main requirements are, and I will repeat them now.

First, recognise the fact, which Britain has denied for fifty years and the Republic has asserted for fifty years that the United Kingdom and the Republic are two countries, two nations, and not one: and draw the consequences from that fact in the normal manner which prevails throughout the world. Implement the law which enables movement between the two countries to be controlled. Desist from regarding as citizens, for the purpose of voting and other rights of citizenship, those who have perpetually declared themselves to be aliens.

Secondly, and as a corollary, institute strict control over all transit of persons by land, sea or air, between the Republic and the United Kingdom: and for the duration of the emergency prohibit all vehicular traffic across the land frontier, except by a small number of routes. These are the measures which anywhere else in the world would be taken as a matter of course when enemy forces were based in the territory of a neighbouring country.

Thirdly, increase the police forces, including the police reserves, to the point at which they are capable of enforcing the law throughout the province, and make arms available to them wherever necessary for this purpose. The troops are in Northern Ireland as an emergency backing and support to the police and the civil power, and not as an external, neutral arbiter or army of occupation. The government must cease to connive at, or tolerate, the exclusion or replacement of the lawful civil power in any part of the province.

If there was one error more potent than another in bringing the present series of catastrophes upon the people of this province, it was the deliberate and almost gleeful supercession of the police in 1969 by a British government which treated them with thinly veiled hostility. There can be no peace and no civilised life where law and order are the responsibility of the military and not the civil power. The business of the Army is to defend the frontier, to destroy the enemy under arms within, and to support civil authority when it might otherwise be overwhelmed by superior force; but the Queen's peace and the laws can only be restored and enforced by a strong and confident police.

Finally, stop all the fiddle-faddle about conferences and constitutions and fancy franchises. We happen to have a constitution in the United Kingdom and in Northern Ireland, and we have no need to invent new ones to amuse or appease those who want no Northern Ireland and no United Kingdom. If the government will not give Northern Ireland democratic government from Westminster like the rest of the kingdom, let the democratic government which Westminster took away from Northern Ireland be restored.

There almost seems no limit to Westminster's appetite for self-deception over the affairs of Northern Ireland. For months and even years now, every pause or intermission in the advancing success of the war against this province has been hailed as evidence that "we are getting on top of the gunmen" or, more recently, that "the initiative is succeeding". On the occasion of the so-called "truce" it required wilful blindness of a supreme order not to perceive that the truce itself, far from being a sign of defeat or exhaustion on the part of the I.R.A., was a demonstration of their confident ability to switch from one tactic to another, a demonstration deliberately and (one would have thought) unmistakably underlined by the planned operation immediately preceding and following the period while the truce lasted.

DISASTER FOR MR. HEATH?

To watch the events and listen to the accompanying Westminster commentary is like witnessing a gigantic and horrible cat-and-mouse performance. Like a nightmare, it seems as if it could go on for ever, one hideous episode following another. But the time is approaching when there has to be an end. Government cannot indefinitely fail to fulfil the most elementary duty of any government - to defend the citizen - without ceasing to be government at all. If that were to come, it would not be Mr. Whitelaw who would go. It would be Mr. Heath himself; for on him is bound to rest the final responsibility for the successive phases of policy which have brought mounting disaster in the last two years.

A week ago we read that the Prime Minister had told an audience at the Royal Commonwealth Society that "the British Government and people have a right to ask the people of Northern Ireland to assert themselves against the men of violence". One would scarcely credit that such an exhortation could be addressed to unarmed men and women by a government which is conspicuously and increasingly failing to provide them with the basic security and physical protection, let alone enjoyment of their lawful rights in peace, which it is the obligation of government to furnish. It is hard to say whether the lack of imagination or the lack of comprehension is the more dangerous: lack of imagination to realise how such language and such attitudes must strike the inhabitants of Belfast and Londonderry, Strabane or Portadown; or lack of comprehension to understand that the essential ingredient mission is that which the Government have themselves removed - conviction that the cause of Northern Ireland as part of the United Kingdom is the cause of the British Government and of the British nation.

conclusions are to their philosophical beliefs . . ."

Political arguments are not all that are made either. Dr. Jensen, when he published his article in the Harvard Educational Review, received threats against his life and physical intimidation by loutish Communist students. Similar treatment has been accorded Dr. Shockley who has had his classes disrupted by unruly ruffians from the so-called "Youth Against War and Fascism" group.

All these are strong words, not from any street corner fanatic, but, from some of the most brilliant minds in the world. It is not we, the racists, who are the bigots, but quite clearly the liberal-Communist blood-brothers who will do anything, even to the point of falsifying and twisting the content of an entire branch of science, to try to "prove" the "rightness" of an obscene dogma.

The foregoing has, over the past few years, caused a furore in the scientific world. Now, at last, some of these scientists are beginning to realise (publicly) the political import of their views with regard to racial integration.

Bussing - the moving of school children forcibly many miles from home to other schools to achieve "racial balance" - is potentially, and in many places already is, the most explosive political issue in the USA. Officially, this is supposed to supply more "quality education" to all. Recently, Time magazine reported on a survey by Harvard sociologist, David J. Armor, on bussing results in six northern US cities. He found that four of the five major premises of integration police "failed to be supported by the data".

On the question of improved education he said, "None of the studies have been able to demonstrate, conclusively, that integration has had an effect on academic achievement as measured by standardised tests." It is, of course, true that both races suffer owing to increased racial tensions.

One issue Armor plays down, but with which every White parent whose children attend racially integrated schools is well acquainted, is crime - and Negro crime at that. Rapes, muggings and, just recently, even murder, are becoming more common in the Northern integrated schools where a few years ago they were unheard of. Teachers in some predominantly Black schools are offered extra salaries, sometimes as much as a thousand dollars a year extra, as "combat pay" to convince them to teach in those schools.

These are some of the real reasons for the amazing landslide victories of Governor George C. Wallace in the Democratic primaries in many Northern states previously thought to be the electoral realm of the Establishment liberals. Their answer to the miserable failure of integration is to cry for more integration!

It is thus not hard to see why much of this is censored out of the news. These scientists are saying, in effect, that the liberal idea of race is in fact founded on fiction, and, what is more, the direction of US government racial policy since 1954 has been one ghastly mistake. As for admissions of guilt or recognition of the mistake, we need not wait for the liberals to speak. The Earth will crumble into dust before that day arrives.

To say that these outspoken comments from some scientists are bringing new information to light is only partially true because, as far as genuine science is concerned, there has never been any doubt about the interrelationship of race, heredity and the differences in intellectual capacity between the races. The facts have only been concealed and perverted by a few unscrupulous people of Left-Wing political persuasion whom the Establishment has seen fit to nurture at the expense of truth.

To remedy this inexcusable state of affairs, we can, and must, as individuals, and as a racial nationalist movement, ensure that these facts obtain the widest possible circulation and publicity, for as surely as the resurrection of our people depends on victory of our Movement, the future of our culture is rooted deep in the heritage of our race.

NATIONAL FRONT LEADS PROTEST

FASTEST MEMBERSHIP GROWTH EVER REGISTERED

During the last month or so the National Front has experienced the most rapid growth in its five year history. It has become commonplace to receive 100 enquiries in a day at Head Office in Croydon and on one day last month 150 were received. On slack days enquiries have numbered at least 50.

These enquiries are being largely converted into enlisted members as fast as literature can be sent out and branches can contact the enquirers concerned. By the 20th September nearly 250 new members had been enrolled during that month alone. After quiet but unspectacular progress for some time the NF has suddenly started to shoot ahead at a tremendous pace.

This growth has been in no small part due to the fact that the NF has been seen to be taking the lead in the nation-wide protest against the new influx of Asiatics from Uganda. A tremendous burst of activity has taken place in recent weeks, with hundreds of thousands of leaflets going out and big demonstrations in many parts of the country. Details of these activities are given on these pages, which have been expanded beyond the usual number to cope with the sudden rush of events and news.

NF contingent leads march from Monday Club meeting (top). NF demonstrators pack end of Downing Street as letter is handed into No. 10 in protest against Asian influx (bottom).

Downing St. Picketed

The National Front started its series of nationwide "Stop the Asian Invasion" demonstrations on Friday 18th August by holding at very short notice a picket of Downing Street in Whitehall, London. It was not expected that many members would be able to attend this demonstration, as it was arranged to take place during working hours — and the Monday Club, supported by several other patriotic bodies, had only been able to raise forty people to support for a similar demonstration only two days before.

However, by 4.30 p.m. in the afternoon more than 100 NF members were on the scene carrying Union Jack flags and banners bearing a wide variety of anti-Immigration slogans. Numerous vehicles passing by the demonstration slowed down and their occupants — including whole bus loads of people — waved and cheered their support. Twelve passers-by joined the National Front on the spot.

By 7 p.m. more than 200 NF members and supporters had assembled and they gave a great cheer when Mr. John Tyndall, Acting Chairman of the NF, arrived in order to deliver a petition of protest against the Asian Invasion addressed to the Prime Minister at 10 Downing Street. At this time the entrance to Downing Street was blocked by a sea of banners and flags.

The petition having been delivered, an impromptu march along Whitehall to the Ugandan Embassy was organised in order to provide an occasion for Mrs. Joy Page, Chairman of the Immigration Control Association, to deliver a letter of protest for the Attention of General Amin. This activity was completely free of unpleasant incidents due to the total absence of Communist organised opposition and the tactful supervision of Police officers from Cannon Row Police Station.

This demonstration won a considerable amount of national and provincial press publicity. A particularly excellent interview with Mrs. Ruth Robinson, a member of the Eltham NF Branch, was published in The Guardian the following day. Mrs. Robinson had caught The Guardian's attention because she brought her two young sons to the activity. Mrs. Robinson defended her decision to involve her children in this protest, saying that it was necessary for all parents to counteract the multi-racialist pro-Communist poison injected into the minds of children at school.

Smithfield Marches Promoted by the NF

It is accepted that the activity which triggered off large-scale demonstrations against the Asian Invasion throughout the country was the first Smithfield Meat Porters' march, which took place on Thursday, August 24th.

National Front H.Q. first heard of rumblings from Smithfield the previous Friday as a result of messages conveyed by NF members working at the market. In the first instance the only information was that Mr. Ron Taylor, well known Smithfield anti-Immigration activist, had called an open-air public meeting of his workmates which was arranged to take place in a square at the side of the market at noon on Monday 21st August.

Knowing that Mr. Taylor did not have at his disposal loudspeaker equipment, a team of H.Q. workers, including Mr. Gordon Brown, NF Administration Officer, arrived at the meeting place with amplification equipment made available by Mr. Tom Lamb, Acting Chairman of the NF Trade Union Group.

This equipment enabled Mr. Taylor to bring to his platform a large number of his workmates, and after he had expressed his disgust at the decision of the Government to allow the Asians to come to Britain, he proposed that a march to the Home Office be organised for the following Thursday. This resolution won unanimous support from the Smithfield men present.

Immediately this decision was taken NF members got to work duplicating thousands of leaflets advertising the march on behalf of the ad-hoc Smithfield Workers Against Immigration. These leaflets were immediately distributed to all Fleet Street newsdesks, and supplies were taken to NF Branch organisers who arranged for their distribution at several London docks, at the Covent Garden and Billingsgate markets, at G.P.O. sorting offices, railway stations and many other workplaces.

For a major demonstration organised at such short notice, the turn-out was quite staggering. More than 600 meat-porters, dockers, office workers, housewives and others took the afternoon off to go on the march. At first the Police tried to persuade Mr. Taylor to take his march along the Embankment, which would have effectively hidden it from the people of London. But Mr. Taylor insisted that the march should go through Fleet Street, the Strand, Trafalgar Square and down Whitehall. This route through the heart of London made the march.

Office workers by the hundred leaned out of windows to cheer the marchers on, and 'thumbs-up' signs were given by drivers and pedestrians. The only hostile demonstration came from a gang of pudgy, smoothly dressed, dead-drunk newspaper gossip columnists, who staggered out of El Vino's in Fleet Street — glasses in hand, to give V signs and shout abuse. The contrast between the decent working people on the march to defend their race and nation and the effete over-paid trendy scribblers symbolised the gap which exists between the masses and the mass-media.

At Whitehall the Union Jack colour party at the head of the march dipped its flags as it went by the Cenotaph, then Mr. Taylor took his petition into the Home Office. The enthusiastic crowd streamed over the road to cheer him on, and the frightened Home Office staff thought that the marchers planned to invade the building, so its two massive doors were quickly slammed shut in their faces. The milling crowd soon came to order and reformed themselves for the march back to Smithfield.

This march was accorded a considerable amount of press and T.V. publicity, as was the open-air rally which preceded the march, which was addressed by Mr. Ron Taylor, Chairman of the Smithfield Workers Against Immigration, Mr. Martin Webster, Activities Organiser of the NF, and Mr. Dan Harmston who works at Smithfield and who is a prominent member of Union Movement. Mr. Harmston's colourful description of Asian infested Southall — he compared it to a film set from Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves — delighted his audience.

Mr. Mark Bonham Carter of the Community Relations Commission did his best to try and belittle the demonstration by describing it as "puny" — but it had a tremendous impact on the nation, encouraging workers in many different cities to hold their own local demonstrations. The meat porters became a symbol of the will of the working people of Britain to resist the alien take-over of their land.

So successful was the first Smithfield march that the Smithfield workers determined to hold another march two weeks later, on Thursday 7th September, and once again the National Front put itself at their disposal. NF H.Q. prepared many thousands of leaflets advertising the activity which, as before, were distributed by NF members to workplaces all over London. Copies of the leaflets were also sent to the hundreds of people who had written to Mr. Taylor congratulating him on the success of the first march. Among these supporters were numerous Shop Stewards. A circularisation to the Press was also carried out, and a display advertisement appeared in the Evening News.

After a brief meeting, at which Mr. Taylor, Mr. Webster, Mr. Harmston, Air Vice-Marshal Donald Bennett and Mrs. Joy Page of the Immigration Control Association were speakers, the column moved off — this time the target was Smith Square, Westminster, where Transport House and Conservative Party Central Office are located.

Press reporters who attended the demonstration were clearly distressed at the size of the march. They had hoped to be able to report a smaller march, but in fact by the time the column had reached Whitehall a Police Inspector estimated that the activity was supported by 1,500 people. The Press was also upset by the considerable support given to the march by housewives, many of whom had brought their children with them. As before, passers by waved their encouragement. The demonstrators were marching eight abreast, and by the time its head reached Parliament Square its tail stretched back to Horseguards Parade. Incredibly, the Press Association 'news' service reported that there were only 200 people on the march!

At Smith Square Mr. Taylor handed in to Transport House — which is the H.Q. both of the Transport and General Workers Union (the union to which the Smithfield men belong) and the Labour Party — letters of protest addressed to Mr. Harold Wilson and Mr. Jack Jones. He then moved over to Tory Central Office where a letter was handed in for the attention of the Prime Minister.

Terrified that the marchers might tear these bastions of the Establishment apart stone from stone, the Police moved the column out of the Square as quickly as they could. The Police need not have worried for the demonstrators on this occasion — as on the previous march — were extremely well behaved. The Police were not obliged to make a single arrest on either march.

RACE TRAITORS DENOUNCED AT LONDON AIRPORT

Violent scuffles with negro British Airport Authority Police and 300 National Front members and supporters broke out at London Airport on the evening of Tuesday 12th September. The Airport Police had clearly been given strict instructions by the Authorities to prevent any demonstration against the Asian Invasion.

The NF members turned up at the Airport with the intention of filling up the reception centre which had been provided by the Government's Resettlement Board for the purpose of doling out to the Asians money (up to £500 per family on demand) and details of jobs and accommodation. On behalf of the million Britons who are unemployed, and the scores of thousands of British families who live in slum conditions, the NF members wanted to put in their claims for cash hand-outs, new accommodation and jobs — with the intention of making out complaints to the Race Relations Board if the Resettlement Board do-gooders refused to entertain their claims. Hundreds of Race Relations Board complaint forms were on hand for this purpose.

The Government clearly wanted to avoid the Resettlement and Race Board having to face this embarrassment, so the Police were instructed to drive NF members — amongst whom were a large number of women — from the premises. The unnecessary frogmarching tactics employed against the women caused a very tense atmosphere. Police even prevented a peaceful picket parade by roughly grabbing banners from demonstrators' hands. Many banners were broken; those that were not were "confiscated".

Violence exploded when one of the Coloured Airport Policemen went berserk and attacked an NF member. Another member attempted to restrain the assailant and was arrested for his pains. While this was going on the main part of the demonstrating crowd, who had set up a deafening chant of "If they're Black — send them back!" were pushed and shoved about by large numbers of nervous and obviously very inexperienced young Policemen.

All this was filmed and extracts were shown on the BBC TV News later in the evening. Two interviews with Mr. Martin Webster, NF Activities Organiser, were also broadcast over the BBC Radio London network. Press publicity the following day was somewhat spoiled as a result of the uninvited intrusion of Mr. Colin Jordan on the occasion. The Daily Mail and Daily Mirror reported that Mr. Jordan was "leader of the National Front". At the time of writing the Daily Mirror has published a correction, and a correction from the Mail is expected.

Savage fines were meted out by Uxbridge Magistrates against ten NF members, who had loaded on to them as many charges as the Airport Police could cook up from the London Airport by-laws. Charges ranged from "participating in a demonstration likely to cause inconvenience to airport passengers" to "resisting arrest" or "refuses to leave the premises when requested". The total fines bill amounts to more than £450 — a staggering amount when compared to the light fines given to Communist dockers who were convicted of really savage assaults.

An emergency appeal has been launched to pay the fines of the arrested NF members, and all patriots should contribute as much as they can to this as soon as possible by sending their donations to NF National H.Q.

Aside from the unfortunate matter of the fines, the fact that there had been a commotion at the Airport over the Asian Invasion (instead of the planned peaceful demonstration) ensured wide publicity and retained public attention on the crisis at a time when the national press was desperately trying to divert it elsewhere.

Manchester NF Branch has also been holding a series of demonstrations at an important point of entry for the Asians — Manchester Airport. Mr. Walter Barton, NF North of England Regional Organiser, has been turning up at the airport Sunday after Sunday during September, supported by more than a hundred NF members and other patriots, in order to hold picket demonstrations and distribute large quantities of anti-Immigration literature. Thanks to the generosity of an NF supporter, 20,000 NF leaflets were distributed in the Manchester area by Manchester Branch during the first two weeks of September.

'Keep Them Out Of Hounslow'

Local NF protests at Hounslow Town Hall

More than fifty members of the Hounslow and Kingston and Richmond Branches of the NF held a lively demonstration outside Hounslow Town Hall on Monday, 4th September, when Hounslow Councillors met to discuss the likely impact of the Asian Invasion on the Borough. The NF crowd soon tripped in size as passers by enthusiastically joined in the demonstration.

Councillors were told in no uncertain terms what local people felt about the prospect of more Asians coming into their already Immigrant infested Borough. The crowd was clearly in an angry mood, but there were no unpleasant incidents as local Leftists steered well clear of the scene.

Once it was known that the Council meeting had got well under way, Hounslow NF Organiser, Mr. Bill Brown, together with a small deputation, insisted on going in to the Town Hall and addressing the Councillors. Protestations that such an intrusion was against the rules and regulations were ignored. From the public gallery Mr. Brown read out a prepared statement of protest on behalf of local residents. The Chairman of the meeting tried to silence him by banging on his table, but Mr. Brown was not silenced and he read his statement in full.

This most effective activity received considerable local coverage, and the text of Mr. Brown's petition was re-printed by the local press, along with extensive reports of the demonstration.

A similar demonstration organised by the same NF Branches, supported by local members of the Monday Club, was held on a later date in September, outside Ealing Town Hall. This time the Left had organised, and about two score members of the International Socialists, International Marxist Group and other Red riff-raff tried to shout the patriots down. One hairy wretch — his mind 'blown' on this occasion by robust patriotic slogan chanting — tried to get violent, but he was stopped in his tracks by a middle-aged housewife who walloped him over the head with "Stop the Asian Invasion" banner. This activity won national press coverage as well as local.

2000 Support Leicester Rally

One of the most impressive demonstrations against the Asian Invasion to date was the march and open-air public rally organised by the Leicester Branch of the National Front on Saturday 9th September. This march was promoted by the local organisers without any help from London, but public support for it was so great that it assumed the importance of a major national activity.

News that the NF was to hold a demonstration in Leicester won attention from the local Press because the Race Relations Industry regard Leicester as a "powder keg". In trying to frighten off local people from joining the demonstration, the Leicester Mercury declared that it was sure to "end in bloodshed". Despite this and a marked lack of co-operation from the Leicester City Police, Leicester organisers Graham Eustace, John Kynaston and Ron Silverwood pressed ahead with their plans.

Their courage paid off handsomely, for while only a few NF members from other towns were able to support the activity (they were busy in their own areas!) the march attracted the support of more than a thousand citizens of Leicester who were only too delighted to be able to express their rage at the Tory Government's betrayal of their best interests.

Hundreds of shoppers left the pavements to join the march, and the column soon swelled to more than 1,000 persons. The crowd at the open-air public rally was even bigger — a Police estimate being 2,300 persons — all but a tiny handful of whom were enthusiastic supporters. Main speaker at the rally was Mr. Jim Merrick, Chairman of the British Campaign to Stop Immigration, whose comments won a very warm reception from the great crowd. Waves of cheering broke out when Mr. Ron Silverwood, Leicester NF Branch Treasurer announced that the Branch would be putting up 16 candidates at next year's municipal elections.

The demonstration — the biggest the city has seen for many years — received ample coverage from the press and TV. The TV camera men worked in liaison with 14 hippy-communist counter demonstrators, who ran from corner to corner giving mock Nazi salutes. The camera crews filmed these antics at such an angle as to suggest to viewers that there were large numbers of people on the pavements hostile to the march. BBC Radio Leicester blotted out all news of the demonstration at the instigation of Leicester City Council, which subsidises the network out of local rates.

B.C.S.I. Success at Bradford

National Front members from different parts of Yorkshire and Lancashire supported a massed march and open-air public rally at Bradford organised by the Bradford-based British Campaign to Stop Immigration.

This march won excellent pre-publicity as a result of two interviews given to the BBC World at One radio programme by British Campaign Chairman Mr. Jim Merrick during the week preceding the event. Asked by ultra-Leftist interviewer William Hardcastle whether he was a racist, Mr. Merrick replied: "I don't know what you mean by 'racialist'. It's just a word that the Left Wing throw around to defame their opponents. If putting your own people first is 'racialist' then the vast majority of the British people are racialsists."

More than a thousand people joined the march — most of them being local citizens of Bradford. As with the NF's march in Leicester, many family groups took part in the demonstration. Fifty International Socialists, most of whom had been imported from as far away as Sheffield and Leeds, tried to mount a counter-demonstration, but they were completely ignored.

NF ENLIVENS MONDAY CLUB RALLY

THE presence of more than 400 National Front members among the 2,000 strong crowd which attended the Monday Club anti-Immigration rally at Central Hall, Westminster, on Saturday 16th September, ensured that the function did not become an Establishment 'safety-valve' operation.

So-called "moderate" officials of the Club intended the rally to propagate not so much against the Asian invasion of our land as for continued support for the Heath Government despite its treachery in allowing the invasion to take place. In other words, the organisers intended the rally to be just another "don't-rock-the-boat-chaps!" Judas-goat operation.

John Biggs-Davison, M.P., one of the Club's most prominent phoney "Rightists" was rewarded with cat-calls and a slow handclap — and not just from NF members — when he said that all persons in the hall who wished to see an end to Immigration could only achieve their objective by becoming members of the Conservative Party. Mr. Biggs-Davison had considerable difficulty making a coherent speech, not only because of sustained heckling but also because he skipped paragraph after paragraph of his prepared text for fear of arousing even greater anger.

Mr. Harold Soref, M.P., made a tolerable speech in which he contrasted the double-standards of the liberal Establishment whereby sanctions against Rhodesia were sustained while foreign aid was still being given to the Amin Uganda regime. Best speech of the afternoon came from Mr. Ronald Bell, whose opposition to his party's policies over Immigration was as strong and as unequivocal as it is possible for a Conservative to be.

Originally the Club organisers planned to hold a march from the hall to Downing Street after the rally was over, in order to hand in a petition to 10 Downing Street — but the "threat" posed by a few hundred Communists and Trotskyites who had gathered outside to yell and bawl abuse, impelled the organisers to cancel their arrangements. Club officials even took away and hid their own members' banners in the hope of preventing an unofficial march from taking place!

However, National Front Directorate member Mr. Martin Vaux, in a question to the platform, demanded that a march take place, and his proposal was greeted with enthusiastic applause. Outside the hall National Front members, with anti-Immigration banners, formed up to head the column, and nearly all of the rest of the rally audience followed behind them, despite instructions that they should not do so from Monday Club officials.

Realising that they were being made to look absolute wets and that their audience was marching away from them, the platform party sheepishly joined in at the end of the column, and handed in their petition at Downing Street. This was the first time Conservative M.P.'s joined what was in effect a National Front organised march through London! It is only fair to record that the exceptional Mr. Bell was delighted with the march.

COMMUNIST FLOP

The Communist counter-demonstration was a total flop. The Reds were brought together under the banner of a new organisation called the Ad-Hoc Committee Against Racism. This group was formed by Asian agitator Tariq Ali of the International Marxist Group, in collaboration with the International Socialists and the Young Communist League, two weeks after millionaire Asian Community leader Mr. Patel visited the Board of Deputies of British Jews in London. The purpose of his visit to the Board was to secure help and advice on how to form an Asian "defence" organisation along the lines of the terrorist Jewish Defence League.

A letter was published on 15th September in the Manchester Jewish Gazette from a number of prominent Jewish Left Wing activists asking for Jewish Community support for the demonstration against the Monday Club meeting. The letter gave a 'phone number for those wishing to join a coach trip to London. A person answering the number stated that 1,000 persons were going by coach from Yorkshire and Lancashire to "smash the Fascist meeting up", and that striking building workers could travel free, and students for 50p. It was not announced who was footing the bill for these subsidised trips.

In the event the turnout of Leftists was laughable. Less than 100 persons in two coaches departed from Manchester. Fewer than 400 young freaks from all parts of the country turned up to demonstrate, and they were not joined by any workers. As soon as the Red rabble saw that the anti-Immigration rally was supported by more than 2,000 patriots, they beat a hasty retreat.

"The New Unhappy Lords"

An exposure of power politics
By A. K. CHESTERTON

THE NEW UNHAPPY LORDS is a must for the bookshelf of any student of modern politics. It represents the most lucid and startling of all commentaries on the methods of subversion being used to undermine Britain and European Civilisation.
